

I do not want the FCC to pass any law that will lessen Indiana's telephone privacy laws. I used to receive about 4 calls from telephone solicitors a day, and now I only get a couple of calls a week. My time at home has improved dramatically since I don't have the constant interruption of telemarketers calling my home. In all actuality, I wish all telemarketing would be banned. I refuse to ever talk to a telemarketer. It is a terrible way to do business; very rude and invasive. If I want to make a purchase, or contribute to a non-profit, I will contact them, but they do not need to intrude upon my privacy at home. With the internet, marketers have a way to contact us by sending us e-mail, and they can send regular mail to us to let us know about special promotions, or other sales. Please do not give companies that consider me a "current customer" the right to invade my privacy by calling my home. Thank-you.
